Connecting fathers and children

FROM, the Players  NATIONAL BASKETBALL PLAYERS ASSOCIATION FOUNDATION

Introduction

As a clinical psychologist, Executive Director of The Fatherhood Project, and the father of two children, I know that fathers play a key role in shaping the lives of our children. Overwhelmingly, the most current research shows that when children feel emotionally connected with their dads, they do better in school and are less likely to become engaged with the criminal justice system. They are also less likely to use drugs and alcohol and suffer from depression. In short, they are more likely to become fully functioning, healthy adults. Studies also show that men who have warm, nurturing relationships with their children are themselves physically healthier, less depressed and more successful in their marriages and careers. In other words, an emotionally close father-child relationship not only serves as a significant protective factor against high risk behaviors, but it is also a potential source of health for the entire family. Children need their fathers and fathers need their children.

Fathers are increasingly on the front lines of childcare, and we at The Fatherhood Project and the National Basketball Association Players Association Foundation are pleased to provide these dads and the organizations that work with them the Massachusetts Resource Guide for Fathers. Here, you will find national, statewide, and community-based resources that can support you in your role as a parent and caretaker. Whether you need help meeting your family's needs, caring for your children, or supporting your own health and well-being, there is a resource that can help. The Guide is very comprehensive and the Table of Contents will serve to help you find your way to a resource that serves your needs. At the end of the Guide you will find 5 Tips for Dads, a list of tools to help fathers deepen their connection with their children.

Thank you to the NBA Players Association and all of our community partners who understand the critical role fathers play in the lives of their families, and who work to support them each step of the way. Finally, thank you to all fathers out there striving to be the best dads they can be for their children. Fathers change the world!

5 Practical Tips for Dads*

1. Create a vision for fatherhood. We believe dads today benefit from creating a clear vision for fatherhood. Twenty years from now, what do you hope your children say about you as a father? What do you hope they don't say? Answering these questions will help you clarify your sense of purpose as a dad and guide you in important decisions with your own children.

2. Be the bridge between your own father and your children. Whether or not you look to your father (or mother) as a model for parenting, the legacy of our parents, for better and for worse, lives inside each of us. This is why it's important to explore and understand your family legacy, particularly your relationship with your father. How will you pass on the positive aspects of your relationship with your father to your own children? How will you avoid repeating the negative aspects of your relationship with your father?

3. Establish a ritual dad time. One way to spend positive time with your child regularly is to create a Ritual Dad Time. This is not meant to replace more frequent rituals like taking your kids to school or reading to them at bedtime. It is a special, once per month, one-on-one time with dad. It's about choosing something you both enjoy doing — cooking breakfast, going for a bike ride or walk, building something out of cardboard, etc. — and being together as father and child. It's not so much about what you do, rather that you do it.

4. Know your children. Every child craves the interest, attention, and presence of their primary caregivers. They need you to know who they are as unique individuals, not as vessels for our own grand plans or unrealized dreams. By becoming an expert about your children's lives - knowing what a certain look on their face means, the best way to get them to sleep, who their friends are, what they're doing in school, what causes them stress — you send a clear and powerful message that they are worthy of your time, interest and attention.

5. Be known by your children. Letting your children know more about you through storytelling is a great way to strengthen your bond. What were you like at your child's age? What mistakes did you make? How did you handle embarrassment? What were your friends' parents like? Not only do stories humanize you and give children a sense of where they come from, but they can also be an effective way to initiate meaningful dialogue with your child.
